did the general work of the house and it was a bad house, and she knew it. She might have been six months there. It was known to the people in Spooners that she had money, and they talked about it. It was said she had £250. She herself made no secret of it. I never knew anything of Prisoner before and never heard my sister say anything. I live with my husband - no family. He is a railway labourer. He earns £1 a week. I don't work. Prisoner told me on the Saturday he sailed for Dundee that if he did well there he would write for me and my husband.

3. James Martin, general dealer, 80 Leicesters Street, Bromley-by-Bow, London. Aged thirty nine. I first came to know Prisoner two years ago. He came into my employment in October 1884 as a hawker of sawdust. He hired a horse cart and stable from me.
